Living the principles

I love what I do. I am intrigued by the aspect of really learning about a person, truly getting to know them, and adapting what I learn to my way of being. I have found that working with individuals has given me the chance to look in the mirror... and to see areas where I can improve as a person.

My advice to new hires would be this: don't come into this job thinking you can just sit and bide your time between meal time and bedtime. You are there to help the individuals live a meaningful life in whatever way they define as 'meaningful.'
